

Francisco lopez

2/2/17

US history

Mr. Harvey

The temperance movement was an organized movement that started during the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries to prohibit the purchase, consumption, and production of alcohol beverages in the United states. By the 1830s the average american of fifteen years of age would drink about seven gallons of pure alcohol a year, alcohol abuse was wreaking many lives of many people. This was during an age where women didn't have many legal rights and they dependent their husbands for support. Then women took a stand a made their voices heard and made, The Woman's Crusade their goal was to persuade saloon keepers to destroy, close their doors and enter another line of business. The leader of the group Eliza Daniel Stewart was not only the leader of the Woman's Crusade but was a supporter of the prohibition and lead the British women's temperance association.

The prohibition and temperance act was the one of the most biggest decisions the people in the United states have ever made. They have taken away the most biggest drug away from everyone to the point where it was illegal people would go to jail for just having one bottle of alcohol. This was also a huge achievement that women have made, they made their voices heard and everyone listened and payed attention. But sadly the prohibition act lasted for a few years and every one got back the drug that causes many problems, but this wasn't the only time that women made their voices heard, both the temperance movement and the women's suffrage movement was another movement that women made their voices heard.

In August, 26 1920 and the nineteenth amendment to the to the constitution was finally ratified. Women had the right the vote and had for the first time had equal rights and the responsibility of citizenship.

These women had been fighting for their rights they have been in many movements such as the temperance movement, religious movements, moral-reform societies, and the abolitionist movement .

These women taking a stand on what they believe in, they've struggled and worked very hard to get their full rights, women were discriminated and they were treated as property.

This was the biggest achievement they have achieved working together side by side and they made it through the suffrage. This was an age where everyone was not treated equally, they were all different but that all changed with these movements not only they change how america was they changed how the people should feel to one another. The showed that women were being the victims but before they say what they feel they get the african american out of segregation they helped the people who were in need of help.

In conclusion the movements that help supported women and helped families in need of aid. These movements not only helped families but also helped the African american people, recovering alcoholics and even women from other countries. Not only they've also got their rights at the end of all these movements, they got what they're fighting for, they got their rights as a full american citizen.

References

http://www.ohiohistorycentral.org/w/Temperance_Movement

<http://www.history.com/topics/womens-history/the-fight-for-womens-suffrage>